Strengthening the present & future growth of the industry's operations.

As the offshore wind industry continues to mature, it is critical that its support systems (operations & maintenance and health & safety) are strong and resilient across the industry. With several projects underway, we will start to see a lot of steel in the water over the next several years. What are the industry standards for operations and maintenance? Operational wind farms also require a trained workforce that values safety – how can we ensure that safety remains a high-level priority as projects get underway?

Join the Oceanic Network (formerly the Business Network for Offshore Wind) to discuss the nexus of these industry support systems and the essential need for them to work together.

Sponsorship Opportunities:

The OSW O&M / Health & Safety Summit will bring together 150+ professionals in the operations and maintenance, health and safety, and data sectors. The two-day Summit offers your business an opportunity to showcase your products and services directly to industry professionals with purchasing power. Contact Denielle Christensen (denielle.christensen@oceanic.org) to learn more.
